Georgia 4-H: Programs with a Purpose

Article by Rhonda Shannon, Photographs submitted

For over 100 years, students all over Georgia and the nation have received instruction on how to be productive in the work force of tomorrow. With modest beginnings, a handful of children in the Newton County, Georgia school system volunteered to participate in an after-school program that was the concept of G. C. Adams. The program would focus on ways to increase the yields in the young men's corn crop, and in 1904, the first club of its kind in Georgia was established. The success of the inaugural Corn Club soon would be followed by the formation of a Canning Club, teaching girls proper vegetable canning techniques. Today, countless instructional clubs are included in this largest youth leadership organization in Georgia, spanning county lines, social statuses and economic structures to service its approximately 170,000 members. This club is 4-H.

The four H's of the green four leaf clover logo symbolize the development of the head

(to think, plan and reason), the heart (to be concerned with the welfare of others, accept the responsibility of citizenship and develop positive attitudes), the hands (to be useful, helpful and skillful) and health (to practice healthy living, enjoy life and use time wisely). The pledge that members recite at each gathering such as club meetings, conferences and events incorporates these four components not only of the 4-H emblem but more importantly the ideals: I pledge my head

Students learn about gardening

*The mission of Georgia 4-H is to assist youth in acquiring knowledge, developing life skills, and forming attitudes that will enable them to become self-directing, productive and contributing members of society. This mission is accomplished, through “hands on” learning experiences, focused on agricultural and environmental issues, agriculture awareness, leadership, communication skills, foods and nutrition, health, energy conservation, and citizenship. Sue Chapman, Associate State 4-H Leader to clearer thinking, my heart to greater loyalty, my hands to greater service and my health to better living for my club, my community, my country and my world.

As part of the Cooperative Extension system, 4-H clubs found a home in extension when the system was created in 1914 with the Smith-Lever Act. This legislation extended outreach programs through land-grant universities to educate Americans about advances in agricultural practices and to help increase ag productivity. Today, cooperative extension continues to serve the educational and developmental needs of communities. Sue Chapman, Associate State 4-H Leader, put it simply that extension is designed “with the goal of taking research of the university out to the people.” Sue continues, “We are partners with Fort Valley State University, an 1890 land-grant institution. Extension includes Agriculture and Natural Resources programs, Family and Consumer Sciences programs, and 4-H and Youth programs.” There are Extension agents and educators in every county in Georgia, and the 4-H program is offered in all 159 counties. Land-grant universities were established when states were given public land with the stipulation that whether sold or maintained for profit, the proceeds would be used to establish at least one college that would teach agriculture and mechanical arts. This legislative mandate for land-grant colleges helped extend higher education to broad segments of the U. S. population.

The land-grant colleges in Georgia are Fort Valley State University and the University of Georgia.

Originally designed to reach and benefit adults through the education and productivity of their children, the various clubs in 4-H are competition-driven to motivate members to reach the highest levels of achievement possible. Taught and mentored by adult staff and volunteers, club meetings are held after school or in many cases, during school hours as part of the educational curriculum. With club membership typically beginning as early as fifth grade with in-school programs, 4-H is in most of the state school systems, with the exception of the larger urban areas. A few of the more popular facets of programs currently offered through 4-H are healthy living (where students learn healthy eating habits and physical activities), shooting sports that include BB gun, archery, air pistol, and shotgun competitions, STEM programs, and performing arts (of which Clovers and Company singing group is a part and Clovers Etc. provides opportunities for individual performers). Livestock projects are also still a popular segment of the 4-H experience. Clover Buds, a pre-club program offered for K-3rd graders, is also offered at some local extension offices for fun, educational activities.

Several conferences or councils for high-school age members are held year round that provide opportunities for students to teach other students about their project, and are all student-led and student-focused workshops. They also do service projects and are encouraged to participate in citizen engagement or citizenship. “A big annual meeting, the State Council, was recently held at Rock Eagle where high school 4-Hers came in. At the end of the council meeting, there’s a ceremony that involves them pledging to vote, which is a civic obligation,” explains Chapman. The students are encouraged to get engaged not only on a local and state levels, but national as well. “We also have a connection to the National 4-H Council who has a facility in Maryland,” Chapman continues. “A group soon will be attending [the Maryland facility] for what’s called Citizenship: Washington Focus and a national conference that’s held there. It gives us all a chance to interact with other 4-H members from all over the country.”

Arch Smith, State 4-H Leader, Director of 4-H

There are five 4-H centers in the state with conference facilities and equipped with guest accommodations and recreational areas. Burton is on the coast at Tybee Island; Fortson is just outside metro Atlanta; Camp Jekyll is located on the south end of the island; Rock Eagle is on the edge of Oconee National Forest near Eatonton; and Wahsegia is in the mountains of north Georgia near Dahlonega.

“The extension system was created with the goal of taking research of the university out to the people, to that end, we are partners with Fort Valley State University, an 1890 land-grant institution.”

—Sue Chapman

The facilities can be rented for events such as sports camps and group retreats, or corporate or private functions such as weddings or family reunions. Tidelands Nature Center is also a 4-H facility located on Jekyll Island that is not available for rent but is a day-use facility for the general public and school groups. The summer camping program hosts more than 9,000 students and 5,000 chaperones in a given year, providing education, fun and interaction. Chaperones that attend are a mix of staff and volunteers which are screened through background checks and other methods for student safety. Volunteer training is available and with some programs, is a requirement, as is certification for some programs. Outside the summer months, the centers are open almost year round with environmental education programs, which serve more than 40,000 school students annually.

The organization continues to expand its programs, developing them to appeal to all children. One growing outreach program is the Military Teen Leadership Summit. This is an extensive program designed for children with military parents that mirrors regular 4-Her activities but with a military slant. Supervised and coordinated by an on-staff military specialist, these camps are held nationwide to provide specialized skills. The coordinator and members can relate to other participating students on similar circumstances associated with military

"Georgia 4-H has something to offer to all young people and we must continue to increase our capacity to help young people to achieve their full potential."

families and can relate to each other as it pertains to their individual situations. They are mentored on some of the same topics as other 4-Her's such as leadership and healthy living, but theirs can also include issues specific to understanding what their parents and other family members may experience as military members.. The program is very popular in areas of the state where military bases are located. "This program represents our diversity and our dedication to provide a program for all children regardless of their interests or situation," said Chapman.

Another expansion is a partnership with Mercer University on the Macon and Savannah campuses where students can visit the Mercer School of Medicine. The university's mission is to grow rural doctors, and to do so, introduces rural 4-Her's to Mercer Medicine. The students visit the campuses and have observed basic medical procedures and interact with medical students currently enrolled. The students are also introduced with the association of medicine and technology, specifically in viewing episodes of tele-medicine. This process is used beneficially in long-distance communications and diagnoses. This partnership is relatively new, having been in existence for about a year and a half, and most of the students participating in this program are not quite old enough to commit to a college. However, the possibility of prospective 4-Her's becoming Mercer Medicine medical students and returning to their familiar rural settings to provide health care is extremely promising.

As with most organizations, the 4-H staff has determined future plans and goals and has been diligently working towards them. Arch Smith, State 4-H Leader and Director of 4-H, states, "In order for Georgia 4-H to reach more youth, we are committed to increasing our use of volunteers, which requires increased training and certification of volunteer leaders. Georgia 4-H has something to offer to all young people and we must continue to increase our capacity to help young people to achieve their full potential." Other short-term planning includes focusing on the facilities, renovating their centers and making them more popular. Also on the horizon is using distance learning with keeping agents up to date on various topics. All this will be made possible through funding from state general assembly allocated funds, from the University System of Georgia, facility rental income, and through private and individual donors and the 4-H Foundation. With approximately 170,000 active 4-Her's in the state of Georgia, funding can sometimes prove to be a daunting task. Supporters like AgGeorgia realize the vital role this program plays to the youth and future leaders of our state as well as the indispensable value that the UGA Extension provides to Georgia's rural residents. Through monetary contributions, volunteerism, advocating and encouragement to this essential group, we can certainly be sure their legacy will continue to be Making the Best Better. ■

Continuing the Legacy of Agricultural Education

Article by Rhonda Shannon, Photographs submitted

In 1928, the Future Farmers of America chapter at Statham High School got its beginning. Using the model of Henry Groseclose who formed the first Future Farmers group in Virginia (FFV), the Barrow County, Georgia group organized with an advisor-teacher of vocational agriculture, a slate of officers and membership total of just less than 25 young men. This group became chartered in January of 1929 and was the first FFA chartered chapter in Georgia. Now celebrating over 90 years in existence, not only has the school and chapter experienced monumental changes during this time but so has the FFA organization itself.

FFA was established and designed to train boys to become better farmers under the aid of the Smith-Hughes Act. The act was adopted in 1917 and named for Senator Hoke Smith and Representative D. M. Hughes, both of Georgia, who introduced the proposed legislation that would provide federal aid to states for the purpose of promoting pre-collegiate vocational agricultural education for ag and industrial trades and for home economics. The Act, as it was argued by legislators, would have an extremely positive role in several facets of the American lifestyle: by adapting to the real needs of children, promoting industrial efficiency and national prosperity, decreasing labor and social unrest and promoting a higher standard of living for the workers. The Act combined prior legislative actions with granting the educational system to do its job properly. Through this Act and the diligence and commitment of those involved in agricultural education, the state finished the 2017-2018 school year with 333 FFA chapters and had additional requests for 2018-2019 school year. Today, Georgia's FFA membership is the 3rd largest in the nation, behind only California and Texas, with a membership of just over 42,000. It's estimated that approximately 60,000 students in Georgia (including FFA members) are being educated through the agricultural education programs. "Even if students don't get involved or stay involved in FFA, they're at least getting exposed to agriculture," says Ben Lastly, Executive Secretary for Georgia FFA.

One way for that exposure to ag is the organization's three-part education model encompassing classroom instruction, supervised agricultural experiences and the FFA. "This model puts agricultural education classes in high schools, has some type of personal experimental learning project away from school and includes FFA involvement," explains Ben. "The three component model have all 3 [parts] the same size and overlapping – classroom (instruction), SAE (supervised ag experience), FFA (the leadership). Not all of those students in agricultural education will be in FFA," continues Ben. "Some middle school students have a 9-week experience [in AgEd] and don't think about it again. Some will stay in FFA because they want to compete in the various activities. Since FFA is not a club, the expectation is if students are in an ag class, they have an SAE and they join FFA." In addition to the SAE which provides students opportunities to apply occupational and academic skills, students can participate in Career Development Events (or CDE). CDE is the competition segment where members can compete as teams or individuals in categories ranging from livestock judging teams to parliamentary procedures to communications to mechanics. "One of the favorite things about our program, and I went through it and it changed my life, is I've seen it from a member perspective [in his home state of Oklahoma] and now from an educator's perspective. FFA has something for everybody. If you're the high-achieving valedictorian student we can challenge you and educate you, even if you don't make a career in agriculture. If you leave knowing where your food comes from, we've helped you," Ben said. "If it's a student who doesn't like school, maybe is mechanically inclined, or maybe you're somewhere in the middle, we genuinely have something for every student. It may be ag research, water quality, working on a farm. We need young people wanting to go into production ag but that's not all that we appeal to," continues Ben. "FFA has something for everybody regardless of demographics, class standing or economic situation. I've seen it turn lives around as it prepares students to be better contributors to the communities."

Some of the changes FFA has experienced in its 90 years were seen as necessary for the organization to keep pace with societal change. In 1965, FFA and New Farmers of America, an association for African-American males, ceased to be two separate organizations and merged into one. In 1969, females were allowed into the membership. "It began slowly," said Ben, "but today, females are very involved in FFA." Not only were the faces of the membership changing, the scope of the organization was as well. Seeing changes occurring in agriculture and the diverse opportunities emerging for the profession, FFA realized a need to adapt its appeal in order to include all students. In 1988, with a motion and approved vote at the national convention, the decision was made to operate by the name FFA. "It was a wise decision, realizing we encompass a lot of agriculture. Our constitution and charter was not adjusted and still reads Future Farmers of America. The emblem is the same with minor adjustments. We maintain our roots in production agriculture, and will always strive to produce farmers; but we are producing all sorts of agriculturalists who will help feed our world," explains Ben.

Other changes are the inclusion of middle school students to the Agricultural Education program. Middle grades are typically 6-8 grades and those being reached and taught about agriculture may teach 500-600 students in school year. "Most every student in those grades will have a business class, ag class, computer class, health or PE," says Ben. "Once they realize they like it or brother/sister was involved in FFA, they'll request an ag class. We're more and more away from the farm, more and more youth have no ties to that. The younger we can start connecting them to it, the better for us all." Keeping in that mindset, Ben was excited about one of the next things coming for ag ed - getting started with elementary level students and introducing agriculture to them. "This will be invaluable," said Ben. Governor Nathan Deal signed the legislation entitled "Georgia Agricultural Education Act," an idea proposed by students and members at Gordon Lee High School and championed by Senator John Wilkinson and State Representative Robert

Dickey. Senate Bill 330 passed unanimously in both the Senate and House on February 20, 2018 and March 15, 2018, respectively. Governor Deal, in a special appearance at the Georgia FFA Convention in Macon, signed the bill on April 27, 2018 on stage in front of the 5,000 students and teachers in attendance. An application from interested schools will be submitted for approval as part of the process for the six pilot schools that will be chosen to participate.

Something that has not changed with FFA has been their commitment to educating students in Georgia about agriculture. Students can participate in a leadership conference in Washington, DC, a five day event to learn how to become effective leaders with the knowledge and confidence to act in ways that help their schools, community and country. Civic engagement and activity is the capstone of this event and the participants are encouraged to apply what they have learned in real, hands-on service activities. In addition, two FFA camps are located in Georgia, one in Covington and the other in Fort Valley, where education, training and competition is always in season. Open year round, FFA events include competitions and learning conferences for students at different age levels. There are Discovery conferences targeted to middle school FFA members, named for the degree that can be obtained by that age group. There are a few conferences where the middle and high schoolers are integrated, which has its advantages, but typically the students that attend do better when they're with their peer group. Other training events include FFA state officer retreats and adult education training. When the camps are not occupied with FFA or aged events, they can be rented for private events such as church groups, family reunions or corporate events. Although the camps do get some funding from the State, they are primarily self-sufficient and the rental fees subsidize that funding and help offset the expenses incurred.

Over the past 90 years, FFA has seen changes occur and has become acclimated to them. The origin of the organization in Barrow County's Statham High School is no longer in existence, but its legacy lives on as the story of the first Georgia FFA chapter. While the Statham FFA chapter is no longer in existence, Barrow County is home to three FFA chapters: including Winder-Barrow, Apalachee, and Russell Middle. The membership of FFA has expanded beyond the original establishment and ideals, and programs have evolved past just production agriculture. As Socrates said, "The secret of change is to focus all of your energy, not on fighting the old but on building the new." With the benefits and possibilities available to members, FFA is certainly aiding in building the next generation of agricultural enthusiasts with the best skills and abilities through leadership and education to grow and enhance this industry that's crucial to everyday life. AgGeorgia is a proud supporter of FFA and the preparation it provides students for developing their potential through life in ag, life in their community and life in their chosen profession as they are Learning to Do, Doing to Learn, Earning to Live, Living to Serve. ■

Insurance Reminder

AgGeorgia Farm Credit, Agricultural Credit Association (Association) loan agreements and/or commitment letters stipulate that borrowers obtain and maintain insurance on property pledged as security for loans with the Association named as mortgagee or loss payee as appropriate.

This notice is a reminder that the minimum amount of coverage required to be maintained is the lesser of your loan balance(s), the actual cash value of the property, the replacement cost of the property or the amount stipulated by your loan officer. Since the amount required could be less than the amount for which the property can be insured, you are encouraged to consider higher limits where applicable to adequately protect your equity interest in the property.

If the property securing your loan consists of improved real estate, unless otherwise advised, at a minimum, your policy must insure against the following perils: fire and lightning; wind; hail; aircraft or vehicle damage; riot or civil commotion; explosion; smoke damage; water damage (other than flood); falling objects; weight of snow, ice or sleet; and vandalism. Loss or damage from flooding is also required if your loan was made after Oct. 4, 1996, and at the time the loan was made the property was located in a government mandate Special Flood Hazard Area and flood insurance was available.

If the property securing your indebtedness consists of personal property including vehicles, machinery or equipment, in addition to the causes of loss cited in the preceding paragraph, the property must also be insured against theft, and where applicable, such as with mobile machinery and equipment, collision and upset.

If your current coverage does not conform to these requirements, please contact your insurance representative and effect the necessary changes to ensure your coverage does comply with these requirements. Please contact your local AgGeorgia Farm Credit representative if you have any questions or comments. ■

AgGeorgia Hosts Educational Workshops

AGAware® Programs held Annually

Article and Photos by Corey Cottle & Rhonda Shannon

A national award-winning educational program for young, beginning, small and minority farmers, AGAware® is proudly offered by AgGeorgia throughout our 79 county territory at no cost to attendees. As an advocate and supporter of the next generation of farmers, AgGeorgia offers the financial training workshops twice annually to producers who wish to develop a better understanding of how to run a successful agricultural operation.

AGAware offers sessions with guidance on the preparing of several financial components of a farm plan including balance sheets, income statements, family finance and budgeting, and accrual income, as well as risk management, technology and recordkeeping. Also discussed is guidance in marketing assistance and applying for financing through FSA and SBA programs. The program was originally developed by sister Association AgSouth Farm Credit.

Since 2015, AgGeorgia has sponsored two of these workshops per year free of charge to participants who learn practical procedures to be financially ready to begin or grow their operation. Classes have been held in Calhoun, Clarkesville, Fort Valley, Perry, Tifton, Valdosta, and Waynesboro in prior years. In 2018, over 40 people attended the two sessions, held in Hull and Rome. Experienced lenders and agricultural specialists provide invaluable information and training in these classes, with hands-on case studies of real-life farming operations and circumstances. ■

Intellectual Capital

By Dr. David M. Kohl

There is an old saying that “to get started in farming and ranching, you either have to inherit land from family, marry into it or be lucky enough to have a generous, rich neighbor gift it to you.” It is tempting to look at successful producers who have a considerable amount of land and think that anyone could be successful with such a head start. Some producers who lack access to capital without land equity can become discouraged or frustrated. This is particularly true among young and beginning farmers.

What strategies can you employ when hard collateral, such as land, is not available? How can an individual build a case for financing when their collateral consists of soft assets, such as equipment, machinery, inventory or management potential?

The answer may start with intellectual capital, which includes less tangible aspects of the business, such as the ability to plan, strategize, execute and monitor results. Whether it is a young producer, entrepreneurial startup, an individual leasing most of the asset base or a business in transition, intellectual capital is crucial in building soft collateral.

Intellectual capital is increasingly becoming a significant factor as more land and equipment assets are leased. Current trends demonstrate a focus on controlling assets rather than owning assets.

How can one build intellectual capital, or soft asset collateral, when farm real estate equity does not exist? The first element would be to build a strong business plan using clear, written ideas. The plan should detail the short- and long-term goals for the business, family and personal life. This process appears to be basic, but it requires thinking through priorities and allocating capital, time and talent resources to their highest and best use. Monitoring progress can be used to ascertain whether equity is being built. This trend analysis can be useful in building a case to lenders and investors for additional borrowing or capital if the business is in growth mode.

There is an old saying that “to get started in farming and ranching, you either have to inherit land from family, marry into it or be lucky enough to have a generous, rich neighbor gift it to you.”

Projected cash flow, production plans and operating schedules linked to a marketing plan are critical. Knowledge of payment schedules, timing of costs and operating capital needs are the intellectual horsepower that can be invaluable in soft collateral assets. To top it off, a cash flow analysis and sensitivity testing of various levels of production, marketing, prices and cost can provide the boundaries of possibilities.

Regularly monitoring results is an important part of intellectual capital. The difference between planned and actual outcomes can be determined using variance analysis. This process allows producers to adjust the business plan with changing conditions not only in the business, but also at the macro level.

For example, a young farmer started his enterprise with a used pickup truck, lots of energy, ambition and a well-thought-out business plan on rented ground. Within five years, he had paid for his equipment and livestock loans with earned profits. These assets, along with a proven track record, were used as equity to acquire land assets with borrowed funds. In this particular case, the individual's and spouse's commitment to a modest lifestyle and dedication to working side-by-side with their agricultural lender were a win-win situation when land equity was non-existent.

Intellectual capital will make a significant difference in the agribusiness world, particularly considering shifts in consumer demand and market volatility. Sometimes it appears business owners who own a lot of land have a head start. However, this often leads to complacency and lack of focus on intellectual capital and management intensity. This is why it is often said that “the first generation makes it, the second generation holds the business and the third generation loses it.” Why? The hard assets, such as land, can be transferred, but the critical element of intellectual capital is often not transferred to the next generation. ■

This is why it is often said that “the first generation makes it, the second generation holds the business and the third generation loses it.”

2018 Intern Program

Our 2018 intern program included four students who were scattered at offices throughout the AgGeorgia territory. At the conclusion of the program, the interns learned policy and procedures, experienced differences in branch portfolios and were assigned projects that were presented to senior management at the end of the intern program. Jack Drew, CEO, congratulated them on a successful summer. Shown from left are Karey Dills, Leanne Chafin, Victoria Robbins and Morgan Hart.

Stockholder Advisory Council

We are pleased to announce that a Stockholder Advisory Council has been created for the sole purpose of working with the Board of Directors by offering nonbinding input, advice, support and advocacy. Their input will strengthen the success of the Association in areas to include, but not limited to, services, reputation, corporate branding, community outreach and Association promotion. In providing this service, the Council may be provided with certain function related resources, if any, within legal parameters, as it fulfills its duties authorized and approved by the Board of Directors. The Council currently consists of sixteen stockholders who are customers of AgGeorgia, were recommended by their local branch and officially appointed by the Board. The Council members will serve on a voluntary or non-compensated capacity. The term of their service will be limited to a three year period. The Councils consist of the following members:

Russell Butler – Brooks County
Will Cabe – Franklin County
Justin Castleberry – Forsyth County
Greg Davis – Tift County
Ben Hadden – Glascock County
Walt Harpe – Crisp County
Justin Hart – Colquitt County
Scott Knight – Laurens County

James Lyles – Catoosa County
Steve Newberry – Jefferson County
Jake Nix – Gordon County
Matt Perfect – Houston County
Rachel Reece – Gilmer County
Howard Sanders – Oglethorpe County
Tim Sumner – Worth County
